

David P. Leffler, MD graduated from Princeton University in 2008 with his AB in politics with a concentration in international relations. He has researched at Princeton University, the Hudson Institute Center for Future Security Strategies in Washington, D.C., and the Interfaith Center of New York. In the past, he has worked as the undergraduate program coordinator, an executive board officer of PALs and a residential computing consultant at Princeton University. He currently works at Detica in Alexandria, Virginia as an analyst. Mr. Leffler is a member of the Foreign Policy Association.