

Rick Rader, MD, is the director of the Morton J. Kent Habilitation Center at Orange Grove in Chattanooga, Tennessee. He addresses the evolving medical problems of patients aging with neuro-genetic syndromes. He is cross trained in both internal medicine and medical anthropology.

He is the editor-in-chief of Exceptional Parent Magazine, the world's most highly respected magazine devoted to parents and professionals rising and supporting individuals with significant and complex disabilities. Under his tutelage the magazine has won innumerable prestigious awards for editorial excellence.

Dr. Rader is the immediate past president of the American Academy of Developmental Medicine and Dentistry and a fellow of the American Association on Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities. He was the first appointed special liaison for Family Healthcare Concerns at the President's Committee for People with Intellectual Disabilities. Dr. Rader is a past recipient of the Exceptional Physician of the Year Award, granted by parents of children with special needs.

Dr. Rader has authored over 100 articles on neurodevelopmental disabilities and has lectured extensively all over the world on the dynamics of the special needs community. He was elected to the National Academy of Practice in Medicine.

Dr. Rader was a member of the Surgeon General's Task Force on Healthcare Disparities for People with Mental Retardation as well as serving as a consultant to the NIH's Office on Rare Diseases. He serves as a medical consultant to Special Olympics. He is an adjunct professor of Human Development at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga as well as serving on the Genetics Advisory Board for the State of Tennessee. He serves on the board of the American Association on Health and Disabilities. He is a member of the New York Academy of Science. He is a member of the Editorial Advisory Board of the Disability and Health Journal as well as the International Journal of Nursing in Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities. He is on the Advisory Board of the Healthcare Innovations Exchange of the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.